Statement under examination

Right administration of the ordinances (baptism and the Lord's Supper) is a mark of a true visible church.

In plain language

The original wording asks whether the right administration of baptism and the Lord's Supper is a mark of a true visible church. The Greek behind the anchor verses supports part of this very clearly. In Matthew 28:19 the command to make disciples is carried out by baptizing them, using the verb 'immerse or dip' (baptizo), into the one name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, and verse 20 binds the community to keep everything Christ commanded to the end of the age. The Lord's Supper is fixed just as firmly in First Corinthians eleven, where Paul says he received and handed on the tradition, and Jesus says do this, an actual command, in remembrance of me, using a word for 'remembrance' (anamnesis) that appears only four times in the whole New Testament. Acts 2:42 then lists the first believers devoting themselves to the apostles teaching, the fellowship, the breaking of bread, and the prayers, and Acts 20:7 shows them gathered to break bread on the first day of the week. So the words on the page establish solidly that both ordinances (commanded church practices) are commanded by Christ and habitually practiced by the assembly. What the wording adds is a second, different claim, that the right administration of these acts is the mark that tells a true church apart from a false one. That ranking is not stated anywhere in the texts. A careful search shows the one verse that actually describes the church, First Timothy 3:15, calls it the pillar and support of the truth, pointing to faithful teaching, and Titus 1:5 makes appointing elders the sign of an assembly put in order. More tellingly, the only places the word 'true' (alethinos) is ever attached near the word 'assembly or church' (ekklesia), in Revelation 3:7 and 3:14, the word 'true' (alethinos) describes Christ, not the church. So the text never supplies a true-versus-false label for a church at all. The commanded practices stand on solid ground, but the specific idea that their administration is the decisive mark is an inference layered onto the words rather than a wording the verses themselves provide. For that reason the lexical (word-level) pattern is best read as genuinely contested at the level of its load-bearing claim.

Verdict rationale

Variant-robust: True · Pan-canonical: False

Direct querying of the lexical store confirms two distinct lexical (word-level) strata. First, the institution and observance vocabulary is dense and well distributed: 'immerse or dip' (baptizo, G0907, 81 occurrences) carries the dominical (spoken by the Lord) command in Matthew 28:19 (the present participle 'while baptizing' (baptizantes) under the aorist imperative (completed-action command) 'make disciples' (matheteusate)) and the gathered conversion in Acts 2:41, while the Supper is fixed by the institution chain in 1 Corinthians 11:23-25, 'hand on' (paradidomi) and 'receive' (paralambano) (the received and delivered tradition), 'do this in remembrance of me' (touto poieite eis ten emen anamnesin) ('do' (poieo, G4160) plus 'remembrance' (anamnesin, G0364), a four-occurrence near-hapax (a word that occurs only four times in the entire Bible)), and 'breaking of the bread' (klao tou artou) (G2806 plus G0740), echoed in Acts 2:42 and Acts 20:7. So the words establish that both ordinances (commanded church practices) are commanded by Christ and habitually practiced by the assembly. Second, the store supplies no vocabulary that ranks ordinance administration as a defining note distinguishing a true visible church from a false one. The only verses pairing 'assembly or church' (ekklesia, G1577) with 'true' (alethinos, G0228) are Revelation 3:7 and 3:14, where 'true' (alethinos) titles Christ, not the church. The proposition is therefore partially grounded in commanded practice but materially contested at its load-bearing second-order claim.

Scripture

Matt.28.19 · for · genre: gospel

Key terms. G0907 βαπτίζω, G3686 ὄνομα

Force. The aorist imperative (completed-action command) 'make disciples' (μαθητεύσατε, matheteusate) is modified by the present participle 'while baptizing' (βαπτίζοντες, baptizantes), marking baptism into the one name (εἰς τὸ ὄνομα, eis to onoma) of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit as a constitutive activity of disciple-making that the risen Lord commands the apostolic company to carry out among all nations. The querying confirms 'immerse or dip' (βαπτίζω, baptizo, G0907) occurs 81 times across the Gospels, Acts, and the Pauline letters, so the command is lexically (at the word level) firm. The verse names baptism as a means of making disciples, not as a diagnostic note by which a community is certified as a true versus false church.

Matt.28.20 · for · genre: gospel

Key terms. G3956 πάντα

Force. The continuation 'teaching them to observe all that I commanded' (διδάσκοντες αὐτοὺς τηρεῖν πάντα ὅσα ἐνετειλάμην, didaskontes autous terein panta hosa eneteilamen) binds the disciples to keep everything Christ commanded, lexically (at the word level) anchoring the obligatory character of his ordinances (commanded church practices) within the ongoing life of the community to the end of the age. This supports the non-optional status of the commanded practices, but it speaks of obedience to commands in general, not of a formal mark of ecclesial (church-related) validity.

1Cor.11.24 · for · genre: epistle

Key terms. G4160 ποιέω, G0364 ἀνάμνησις, G2806 κλάω

Force. Querying the tokens of this verse returns the institution language directly: 'he broke' (ἔκλασεν, eklasen) (from 'break' (κλάω, klao, G2806)) for the breaking, the imperative 'do' (ποιεῖτε, poieite) (from 'do' (ποιέω, poieo, G4160)), and 'in remembrance of me' (εἰς τὴν ἐμὴν ἀνάμνησιν, eis ten emen anamnesin) (from 'remembrance' (ἀνάμνησις, anamnesis, G0364)). 'Remembrance' (ἀνάμνησις, anamnesis) is a four-occurrence near-hapax (a word that occurs only four times in the entire Bible) (Luke 22:19, 1 Corinthians 11:24, 1 Corinthians 11:25, Hebrews 10:3), and verse 23 frames the whole as received and delivered tradition (παρέλαβον, parelabon ('I received'); παρέδωκα, paredoka ('I handed on'); from 'hand on' (παραδίδωμι, paradidomi, G3860), which occurs 123 times). The grammar makes the Supper an explicitly commanded, repeated memorial act of the assembly. It establishes the ordinance (commanded church practice) as instituted and obligatory, but supplies no language ranking its administration as the mark of a true church.

Acts.2.42 · for · genre: narrative

Key terms. G0740 ἄρτος, G0652 ἀπόστολος

Force. The new community devotes itself ('devoting themselves continually' (προσκαρτεροῦντες, proskarterountes)) to the apostles' teaching ('teaching' (διδασκῆ, didache, G1322)), the fellowship ('fellowship' (κοινωνία, koinonia, G2842)), the breaking of bread ('breaking of the bread' (κλάσει τοῦ ἄρτου, klasei tou artou), from 'bread' (ἄρτος, artos, G0740)), and the prayers. The phrase 'breaking of the bread' (κλάσις τοῦ ἄρτου, klasis tou artou) names a regular table practice of the gathered believers, the same gathering described in Acts 20:7 ('when we had gathered to break bread' (συνηγμένων κλάσαι ἄρτον, synegmenon klasai arton) on the first day of the week). This is narrative description listing the breaking of bread alongside teaching, fellowship, and prayer as habitual features of the body, but the syntax coordinates the four items with 'and' (καί, kai) and does not rank any one or label it the defining note of a true church.

1Tim.3.15 · complicates · genre: epistle · figures: metaphor

Key terms. G1577 ἐκκλησία

Force. Paul tells Timothy how one ought to conduct oneself 'in the house of God' (ἐν οἴκῳ θεοῦ, en oiko theou), 'which is the church of the living God, the pillar and support of the truth' (ἥτις ἐστὶν ἐκκλησία θεοῦ ζώντος, στῦλος καὶ ἑδραῖωμα τῆς ἀληθείας, hetis estin ekklesia theou zontos, stulos kai hedraioma tes aletheias). This is the one anchor that explicitly predicates a defining descriptor of the assembly, and the querying shows that descriptor is 'pillar' (στῦλος, stulos, G4769, only 4 occurrences) and 'support or bulwark' (ἑδραῖωμα, hedraioma, G1477, a true hapax (a word that occurs only once in the entire Bible), occurring only here), both governing 'of the truth' (τῆς ἀληθείας, tes aletheias). The identifying property the lexicon attaches to the 'assembly or church' (ekklesia) here is fidelity to apostolic truth, not the administration of the ordinances (commanded church practices). This complicates the proposition because the sole verse that characterizes the church names truth, not sacramental administration, as its mark.

Titus.1.5 · complicates · genre: epistle

Key terms. G1577 ἐκκλησία

Force. Paul left Titus in Crete 'so that you might set in order what remains and appoint elders in every city' (ἵνα τὰ λείποντα ἐπιδιορθώσῃ καὶ καταστήσῃς κατὰ πόλιν πρεσβυτέρους, hina ta leiponta epidiorthose kai katasteses kata polin presbyterous) (from 'elder' (πρεσβύτερος, presbyteros, G4245)). The lexical (word-level) sign of putting a local assembly in order here is the appointment of elders, again pointing to ordered oversight and faithful teaching rather than to ordinance administration as the criterion of a properly constituted church. It runs parallel to the ordinances without subordinating either to the other.

Matt.18.17 · neutral · genre: gospel

Key terms. G1577 ἐκκλησία

Force. The unrepentant brother is finally told to the 'assembly or church' (ἐκκλησία, ekklesia), and refusal to hear the assembly results in his being treated as 'like the Gentile and the tax collector' (ὥσπερ ὁ ἔθνικὸς καὶ ὁ τελῶνης, hosper ho ethnikos kai ho telones). Coupled with the binding and loosing of verse 18 ('bind' (δέω, deo, G1210), 'loose' (λύω, luo, G3089)), this lexically (at the word level) grounds the assembly's authority over membership and discipline, an ecclesial (church-related) function that lies alongside, but is distinct from, ordinance administration. It is neutral to the specific proposition about a mark.

Rev.3.14 · neutral · genre: apocalyptic

Key terms. G1577 ἐκκλησία, G0228 ἀληθινός

Force. A targeted search for any verse pairing 'assembly or church' (ἐκκλησία, ekklesia, G1577) with a true or false marker ('true' (ἀληθινός, alethinos, G0228), 'true' (ἀληθής, alethes, G0227), 'false' (ψευδής, pseudes, G5571)) returns only Revelation 3:7 and Revelation 3:14, the letters to Philadelphia and Laodicea. In both, 'true' (ἀληθινός, alethinos) titles Christ (here 'the Amen, the faithful and true witness' (ὁ Ἀμήν, ὁ μάρτυς ὁ πιστὸς καὶ ἀληθινός, ho Amen, ho martys ho pistos kai alethinos)), not the church. The canon nowhere lexically (at the word level) attaches a true-versus-false predicate to the assembly itself. This is the strongest single signal that the mark-of-a-true-church classification is not a vocabulary the text supplies; it is neutral to whether the practices are commanded.

Complicating texts

1Tim.3.15 · addressed

The single anchor that explicitly characterizes the 'assembly or church' (ἐκκλησία, ekklesia) calls it 'pillar and support of the truth' (στῦλος καὶ ἐδραίωμα τῆς ἀληθείας, stulos kai hedraioma tes aletheias), where 'support or bulwark' (ἐδραίωμα, hedraioma) is a hapax (a word that occurs only once in the entire Bible) occurring only here. The identifying property is fidelity to apostolic truth, not ordinance administration. Resolved by observing that the proposition is not contradicted (the church still practices the ordinances) but its specific weighting of right administration as THE defining mark is not the property this verse predicates, which is why the verdict is disputed rather than affirmed.

Titus.1.5 · addressed

The sign of an assembly set in order here is the appointment of elders ('elder' (πρεσβύτερος, presbyteros, G4245)). Resolved by treating ordered oversight and ordinance administration as parallel features of church life in the lexical record; no anchor elevates ordinances alone to the decisive note of a true visible church, so the proposition's emphasis is read as an inference rather than a stated lexical (word-level) claim.

Rev.3.14 · addressed

The only canonical pairing of 'assembly or church' (ἐκκλησία, ekklesia) with the adjective 'true' (ἀληθινός, alethinos) is Revelation 3:7 and 3:14, where 'true' (ἀληθινός, alethinos) is a christological (about Christ) title, not a predicate of the church. Resolved by noting that this confirms, rather than damages, the verdict: it shows the text never supplies a lexical (word-level) true-versus-false church taxonomy at all, so any criterion for distinguishing a true church (whether ordinances, truth, or elders) is an inference imported onto the vocabulary, not read out of it. This makes the proposition disputed at its second-order claim while leaving the commanded practices intact.

All anchor verses are New Testament outside 3 John, so the ingested ECM apparatus (the critical edition of New Testament textual variants) window (3 John 1:1 to 1:15) does not cover them and CBGM (Coherence-Based Genealogical Method) data is not in scope for this run; the VariantUnit set returned empty from the store. The SBLGNT apparatus marks on Matthew 28:19 (the 'therefore' (οὖν, oun) reading), Matthew 18:15-19 (word order and the 'against you' (εἰς σέ, eis se) clause), and 1 Timothy 3:15 touch word order and minor orthography (spelling), none of which bear on whether baptism or the breaking of bread are commanded and practiced. The verdict holds across the plausible readings.

marks-of-the-church ecclesiology: affirms · On this reading the dominical (spoken by the Lord) command to baptize (Matthew 28:19), the explicit institution of the Supper as a commanded repeated memorial (1 Corinthians 11:24-25, 'do this in remembrance of me' (touto poieite eis ten emen anamnesin)), and the apostolic devotion to the breaking of bread (Acts 2:42, Acts 20:7) together warrant treating right ordinance administration as a constitutive note of the visible church: a body where these commanded acts are absent or corrupted is by that fact not rightly ordered. The lens reads the commanded-practice data as sufficient to ground the mark, since marks are inferred from what the gathered body is commanded to do, not from a verse that uses the word mark.

plain-description ecclesiology: disputed · On this reading the same verses are command and narrative without a 'marks of the church' (notae ecclesiae) grid. The lexicon presents baptism, the breaking of bread, teaching, fellowship, prayer, elder appointment, and discipline together, coordinated by 'and' (καί, kai) and not ranked. The one verse that predicates a defining descriptor of the 'assembly or church' (ekklesia) (1 Timothy 3:15) names truth, and Titus 1:5 names elders. Since the text never lexically (at the word level) pairs 'assembly or church' (ekklesia) with a true-versus-false predicate (Revelation 3:7 and 3:14 apply 'true' (alethinos) to Christ), elevating ordinance administration specifically to THE mark is an inference the words underdetermine.

ordinances-as-obedience reading: affirms_practice_not_mark · A third defensible position grants everything the words say and stops there: the ordinances (commanded church practices) are unambiguously commanded (Matthew 28:19-20 binds keeping all Christ commanded) and habitually practiced, so a church ought to administer them, but the text frames them as obedience owed by disciples rather than as a forensic (court-style judgment) criterion for sorting true from false churches. This lens affirms the practice as obligatory while declining the mark taxonomy as extra-lexical (not derivable from the words themselves), landing functionally between the other two.

The proposition turns on a second-order classification, mark of a true visible church, that the lexical (word-level) store can neither confirm nor deny directly. Direct querying confirms the underlying practices are commanded and habitual and supplies the institution language ('immerse or dip' (baptizo), 'do' (poieo) plus 'remembrance' (anamnesis), 'breaking of the bread' (klao tou artou), the 'hand on' (paradidomi) tradition), but supplies no ranking that makes their right administration THE distinguishing note, and no true-versus-false predicate of the 'assembly or church' (ekklesia) anywhere in the canon.

Stem audit

verdict-preloaded: yes

Neutralized form. Baptism and the Lord's Supper are commanded by Christ and practiced by the gathered assembly in the New Testament; whether their right administration functions as a defining mark distinguishing a true visible church from a false one is the question under test.

The phrase 'is a mark of a true visible church' embeds the 'marks of the church' (notae ecclesiae) category, a taxonomy of marks or notes, into the stem and thereby presupposes the very classification being asked about. The lexical (word-level) verdict is derived on the original stem, but the neutralized_form separates the lexically attested fact (the ordinances are commanded and practiced) from the contested inference (that right administration is THE distinguishing mark). The verdict is unchanged from the prior file; deeper querying strengthened, not altered, the disputed reading by adding the Revelation 3:7 and 3:14 finding that the canon never lexically (at the word level) predicates true-versus-false of the 'assembly or church' (ekklesia).
