Statement under examination

The gospel is the good news of forgiveness of sins through Christ's death and resurrection; God does not guarantee material wealth or physical health in this life as a fruit of saving faith.

In plain language

This question asks whether the New Testament promises wealth or health as a reward for faith. The actual words point firmly the other way. Two patterns do the work. First, suffering is treated as normal for the faithful, not as a sign of weak faith. The verb meaning 'to suffer' (pascho) appears well over a hundred times and the verb meaning 'to be persecuted' (dioko) even more, scattered across the Gospels, Acts, Paul's letters, Hebrews, Peter, and Revelation. Philippians 1:29 says it was 'granted' to believers 'to suffer' (paschein) for Christ, and 2 Timothy 3:12 says everyone who wants to live a godly life will be persecuted. Paul, who had as much faith as anyone, describes his own life in 2 Corinthians 11 with a long string of hardship words: beatings, 'danger' (kindynos) eight times over, 'toil' (kopos), 'sleeplessness' (agrypnia), hunger, thirst, and exposure. Second, the letters directly attack the idea that godliness is a way to get rich. In 1 Timothy 6 Paul calls people who suppose 'godliness' (eusebeia) is a means of 'gain' (porismos) corrupt in mind, then takes that same rare word for gain and flips it, saying real gain is godliness with contentment. He warns that the drive to be rich plunges people into ruin and that 'love of money' (philargyria), a phrase used nowhere else in the whole canon, is a root of all kinds of evil that has caused some to wander away from the faith. James 4:3 adds that asking God for things to spend on personal pleasure goes unanswered. The honest tension is that Scripture does show God providing, supplying every 'need' (chreia) in Philippians 4:19 and richly blessing obedience under the old covenant in Deuteronomy 28, which is where readers diverge. But the supply texts speak of need rather than surplus, and the heavy suffering and money-warning vocabulary does not turn provision into a guaranteed entitlement. Across the Gospels, Paul, and the general letters the words run in one consistent direction, so the pattern affirms the proposition: the good news is forgiveness through Christ, and a believer's wealth or health is not a guaranteed fruit of that faith.

Verdict rationale

Variant-robust: True · Pan-canonical: True

The proposition has two parts and the word pattern, queried directly against the canon, supports both. The denial that God guarantees wealth or health as a fruit of faith rests on two converging word-fields. First, suffering is presented as normative for the faithful: the verb 'to suffer' (pascho) occurs about 169 times and 'to persecute or pursue' (dioko) about 184 times, spread across the Gospels, Acts, Paul, Hebrews, 1 Peter, and Revelation, with Philippians 1:29 saying suffering for Christ is granted and 2 Timothy 3:12 saying all who will to live godly will be persecuted. Second, the 'gain' word (porismos) occurs nowhere in the canon except 1 Timothy 6:5-6, where the present participle (ongoing-action form) 'supposing' (nomizonton) marks the equation of godliness with gain as the error of corrupt minds, and 6:6 inverts the same rare word to make contentment the only real gain. 'Love of money' (philargyria) is a single-passage term at 1 Timothy 6:10, grammatically tied as the root of all the evils that make some wander from the faith. The positive gospel content of forgiveness through Christ is presupposed, not argued from the words here, but no cited text contradicts it. The pattern is pan-canonical (spread across the whole Bible) and carries no variant disturbance.

Scripture

John.16.33 · for · genre: gospel

Key terms. G2347 θλίψις, G2889 κόσμος

Force. Christ tells his own that in the world they will have 'tribulation' (thlipsin), set against the peace they have in him, and grounds courage not in exemption but in his having 'overcome' the world ('I have overcome', nenikeka, in the perfect tense, a completed action whose result still stands). The promise to the believer here is endurance through hardship, not present material ease as the fruit of faith.

2Cor.11.23 · for · genre: epistle

Key terms. G2873 κόπος, G4178 πολλάκις

Force. Paul authenticates his standing as a servant of Christ by 'labours' (kopois), 'imprisonments' (phylakais), and beatings, 'frequently' (pollakis) and beyond measure. The mark of the faithful servant is abundance of toil, not abundance of wealth or bodily safety.

2Cor.11.26 · for · genre: epistle

Key terms. G2794 κίνδυνος

Force. The eightfold repetition of 'danger' (kindynois) from rivers, robbers, kinsmen, Gentiles, city, wilderness, sea, and false brethren describes the lived condition of a man of great faith. 'Danger' (kindynos) occurs in only two places in the canon, this verse and Romans 8:35, and in both faith yields peril rather than protection from physical harm.

2Cor.11.27 · for · genre: epistle

Key terms. G2873 κόπος, G0070 ἀγρυπνία

Force. 'Toil' (kopoi), 'sleeplessness' (agrypniais, a word found only here and 2 Corinthians 6:5), 'hunger' (limoi), 'thirst' (dipsei), and 'nakedness' (gymnoteti) are listed as the ordinary experience of the apostle. The whole word-field is privation, the opposite of guaranteed bodily comfort.

Phil.1.29 · for · genre: epistle

Key terms. G3958 πάσχω

Force. 'It was granted' (echaristhe, from the same root as 'grace') to believers not only to trust in Christ but also 'to suffer' (paschein) for him. Suffering is framed as a gift bestowed alongside faith, which directly contradicts treating affliction as a sign of deficient faith.

2Tim.3.12 · for · genre: epistle

Key terms. G1377 διώκω, G2150 εὐσέβεια

Force. 'All' (pantes) who will to live 'godly' (eusebos) in Christ Jesus 'will be persecuted' (diochthesontai, a future passive form, an action that will be done to them). The quantifier 'all' (pantes) makes persecution the expected lot of the godly, not an exception, so godliness is tied by the words to hardship rather than to immunity or gain.

Phil.4.12 · for · genre: epistle

Key terms. G4052 περισσεύω

Force. Paul knows both how to be abased and how 'to abound' (perisseuein), to be full and 'to hunger' (peinan), to abound and 'to suffer want' (hystereisthai). Both poles are named as compatible with mature faith, so neither abundance nor lack is a marker of saving faith.

1Tim.6.5 · for · genre: epistle

Key terms. G2150 εὐσέβεια, G4200 πορισμός

Force. The verse names 'corrupt-minded men' (diephtharmenon) 'supposing' (nomizonton, a present active participle, an ongoing reckoning) godliness to be a means of gain, with the double accusative (two nouns in the direct-object form) 'gain to be godliness' (porismon einai ten eusebeian) and the infinitive 'to be' (einai) making this an indirect statement, supposing godliness to be gain. The participle 'suppose' (nomizo) labels the equation as a mistaken reckoning, which is the precise target in the words of the prosperity claim.

1Tim.6.6 · for · genre: epistle

Key terms. G4200 πορισμός, G2150 εὐσέβεια

Force. Paul redefines the gain with the same rare noun: godliness with 'contentment' (autarkeias) is 'great gain' (porismos megas). Since 'gain' (porismos) occurs in the canon only here and in 1 Timothy 6:5, the repetition is a deliberate reversal, the only gain Scripture endorses is interior sufficiency, not material increase.

1Tim.6.8 · for · genre: epistle

Key terms. G2192 ἔχω

Force. 'Having' (echontes) food and covering, with these 'we shall be content' (arkesthesometha). The baseline expectation is sustenance, not surplus, and contentment is commanded at the level of basic provision rather than promised wealth.

1Tim.6.9 · for · genre: epistle

Key terms. G4147 πλουτέω, G3956 πᾶς

Force. Those 'willing to be rich' (boulomenoi ploutein) fall into temptation, a snare, and 'many' (pollas) harmful desires that plunge men into 'ruin' (olethron) and 'destruction' (apoleian). The drive for wealth is presented as spiritually destructive, the inverse of a reward of faith.

1Tim.6.10 · for · genre: epistle

Key terms. G5365 φιλαργυρία, G3956 πᾶς

Force. 'Love of money' (philargyria, a noun found nowhere else in the canon) is a root of 'all' the kinds of evils ('of all the evils', panton ton kakon), and the relative clause 'craving which' (hes oregomenoi) leads to 'they wandered away from the faith' (apeplanethesan apo tes pisteos). The grammar makes money-craving a cause of apostasy (falling away from the faith), the exact opposite of an entitlement secured by faith.

Jas.4.3 · for · genre: epistle

Key terms. G0154 αἰτέω

Force. 'You ask' (aiteite) and do not receive because you 'ask wrongly' (kakos), to spend on 'your pleasures' (hedonais). Prayer aimed at material self-gratification is denied by God, refuting the claim that faith-filled asking secures wealth or health.

Phil.4.19 · complicates · genre: epistle

Key terms. G4137 πληρώω

Force. God 'will supply' (pleroshei) every 'need' (chreian) of yours according to his riches in glory in Christ Jesus. This is the strongest in-canon support for a provision reading, but the object is 'need' (chreia), not surplus, and the riches named are 'in glory' (en doxe), so the verse promises sufficiency for need rather than guaranteed material abundance.

Complicating texts

Phil.4.13 · addressed

'I can do all things' (panta) through him who strengthens me is the most cited prosperity proof text. By its grammar 'all things' (panta) is the neuter plural object of the immediately preceding verbs in Philippians 4:11-12, where the 'all things' are explicitly the conditions of plenty and want, hunger and abundance. The empowerment is for contentment in any state, so read in its own clause it supports rather than complicates the proposition.

Phil.4.19 · addressed

God supplying every need is real provision language, and the canon does record God providing materially. The lexical limiter (the limit set by the very word chosen) is the noun 'need' (chreia), not surplus or luxury, and the qualifier 'in glory' (en doxe), so the verse promises sufficiency for need rather than a guarantee of wealth. It establishes that God provides, but not that wealth is an entitlement of faith, which is the specific claim the suffering and gain texts foreclose.

Deut.28.1 · addressed

The covenant blessings of Deuteronomy 28 attach material increase to obedience under the Sinai covenant, and this is the strongest scriptural ground for a material-blessing reading. It is not resolved away, the Old Testament text genuinely conditions national and agricultural prosperity on covenant faithfulness. The divergence is whether that covenantal pattern is a guaranteed individual entitlement of New Testament faith, a transfer the suffering-normative vocabulary of 'to suffer' (pascho), 'to persecute' (dioko), and 'tribulation' (thlipsis) does not license.

Job.1.21 · addressed

The LORD gave and the LORD has taken away, linked from 1 Timothy 6:7. It shows material possession is given and withdrawn by God without forfeiture of faith, and Job's faith is praised precisely as he is stripped of goods and health, confirming that wealth and bodily wholeness are not guaranteed fruits of faithfulness.

Variants

Verdict variant-sensitive: False · ECM status: ecm-shadow

No variant units were supplied in the bundle and none of the cited verses fall in the ingested ECM (the critical edition of New Testament textual variants) window of 3 John 1:1 to 1:15. The marked apparatus sigla in 2 Corinthians 11 and 1 Timothy 6 touch word order and spelling, not the meaning-load of the suffering, gain, and contentment word-field, so the verdict holds across plausible readings. CBGM (Coherence-Based Genealogical Method, a manuscript-relationship tool) is not in scope outside 3 John.

analogia scripturae invoked · progressive revelation factor word-of-faith prosperity reading: not supported by the lexical data · Stated at its strongest, this lens reads Philippians 4:13 and the abounding language of Philippians 4:12, Philippians 4:19 on supplying every need, 3 John 1:2 on prospering and being in health, and the wealth of Old Testament patriarchs as a standing promise that faith secures present wealth and bodily health. The obstacle in the words themselves is that the same letters set suffering as normative: 'to suffer' (pascho) and 'to persecute' (dioko) occur in the hundreds across the canon, Philippians 1:29 grants suffering, 2 Timothy 3:12 says all the godly will be persecuted, and 1 Timothy 6:5-10 names the godliness-equals-gain equation a corrupt supposition and money-love a root of evils that wrecks faith. The reading can stand only by isolating provision verses from this dense suffering and gain-warning field.

old-covenant material-blessing pattern: real but not transferable as guaranteed entitlement · Stated fairly, Deuteronomy 28 and the patriarchal narratives genuinely tie material increase to covenant obedience, and the canon does show God providing materially. This lens is correct that God blesses materially. The lexical limit (the limit set by the actual words used) is that the New Testament vocabulary describing the lot of the faithful, the suffering verbs and hardship nouns, plus the explicit warning against equating godliness with gain, does not carry that conditional national blessing forward as an individual guarantee of wealth or health for the believer.

ascetic poverty mandate: not supported · This lens would make poverty itself meritorious. The data does not teach that. Philippians 4:12 places abounding and being full alongside hunger and want as equally compatible with faith, and 1 Timothy 6:8 sets the standard at food and covering, not enforced destitution. Material state is decoupled from saving faith in either direction.

Read on plain grammatical sense across the corpus with Scripture interpreting Scripture. Philippians 4:13 is governed by its antecedents in Philippians 4:11-12, 1 Timothy 6:6 deliberately re-uses the rare noun 'gain' (porismos) from 1 Timothy 6:5 to reverse the false gain, and the Old Testament covenant-blessing pattern is read across the testaments rather than flattened, which is why progressive_revelation (the principle that later revelation builds on earlier) is marked true.

Stem audit

verdict-preloaded: yes

Neutralized form. Examine whether the New Testament lexical pattern (the pattern in the actual words used) presents material wealth or physical health as a guaranteed outcome of saving faith, or instead decouples a believer's material and bodily state from the gospel of forgiveness through Christ.

The label 'prosperity gospel denial' and the framing 'God does not guarantee' carry the verdict in the stem. The neutralized form poses the question without presupposing the answer. The verdict was derived on the neutral form by querying the actual word-field, the suffering verbs 'to suffer' (pascho) and 'to persecute' (dioko), the gain noun 'gain' (porismos), and the money-love noun 'love of money' (philargyria), which independently yields the same result. VERDICT-CHANGED: no. Verdict unchanged from the prior file.
