Statement under examination

Public schooling, Christian schooling, and homeschooling are all permissible Christian approaches; parental responsibility for discipleship remains primary regardless.

In plain language

The two anchor passages speak with clarity about who is responsible for teaching children, and with silence about the schooling institutions the question lists. In Deuteronomy 6:6 to 9 the words are first to rest on the parent's own heart, then to be taught diligently to the sons (the verb 'sharpen into' or shanan in Hebrew), spoken about while sitting, walking, lying down, and rising up, and written on the doorposts ('doorposts' or mezuzot in Hebrew) and gates of the home. The verbs carry the weight of command, repetition, and household saturation. In Ephesians 6:4 fathers ('fathers' or pateres in Greek) are told to 'nurture' (the verb ektrepho in Greek) their children in the 'training' (paideia) and 'admonition' (nouthesia) of the Lord and not to provoke them to anger. Across both Testaments the burden of discipleship rests squarely on the parent, and that first half of the proposition, parental responsibility remaining primary, is well supported by the words themselves. The second half is different in kind. The training vocabulary in these passages names a content, training and admonition of the Lord, and a disposition, sharpened into the children, nurtured like one's own flesh, but it does not name a delivery channel. Public schooling, Christian schooling, and homeschooling are categories the canon does not put into words. Reinforcing this, the same Greek root paideia (translated 'training') appears in Acts 7:22 when Stephen says Moses was instructed in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, an entirely non-covenant setting, and Daniel was taught Chaldean letters in a pagan court yet remained faithful. So the words do not channel-restrict their own training vocabulary. Yet the household saturation of Deuteronomy 6 leads some readers to judge that any arrangement that structurally displaces parental discipleship is in tension with the texts. Because the duty is firm and the channel is genuinely underdetermined (not settled by the words) by the vocabulary, the compound statement as a whole is best treated as lexically contested rather than settled. The words decide the question of who must disciple, and they leave the question of which institutional arrangement is acceptable to wisdom rather than to direct command.

Verdict rationale

Variant-robust: True · Pan-canonical: True

The anchor texts use command, repetition, writing, and nurture verbs that bind the parent to the discipleship task across the entire daily cycle, so the primacy clause is lexically firm. The institutional clause is different in kind. The Hebrew and Greek vocabulary names a content of teaching, namely 'training' (paideia) and 'admonition' (nouthesia) of the Lord, and a disposition, namely 'sharpen into' (shinanta) and 'nurture' (ektrepheite), but never names a delivery channel that the modern terms public, Christian, or home schooling would translate. The proposition therefore conjoins one part the lexicon decides and one part the lexicon underdetermines (the words do not settle it), and that asymmetry is itself the reason readers divide.

Scripture

Deut.6.7 · for · genre: law · figures: merism

Key terms. H8150 שָׁנַן, H1696 דִּבַּר, H1121 בֵּן:

Force. The piel (the Hebrew intensive form) verb 'you shall sharpen into' or 'teach diligently' (shinanta) is directed 'to your sons' (le-vaneka) and is paired with 'you shall speak' (dibbarta), then anchored to the daily cycle of sitting in the house, walking in the way, lying down, and rising up. The cycle names every quotidian (everyday) frame by a merism (a two-part figure naming the extremes to mean the whole) but no formal setting. The verb 'sharpen' (shanan) elsewhere refers to sharpening arrows or tongues, so its teaching sense is local to this construction and depends on the 'b' preposition object plus the human recipient, not on any named institution.

Deut.6.6 · for · genre: law

Key terms. H6680 צֶה, H3824 לֵב.

Force. The commanded words are first to rest 'upon your own heart' (al-levavekha) before being transmitted, so the lexical sequence makes the parent the prior bearer of the content. The piel (the Hebrew intensive form) verb 'command' (tsavah) marks this as command, not advice, but the command targets the heart and mouth of the parent, not any delivery structure for the children.

Deut.6.9 · for · genre: law

Key terms. H3789 כָּתַב, H4201 מְזוּזָה

Force. Writing the words ('and you shall write them', u-khtavtam) on the doorposts ('doorposts', mezuzot) and gates extends the teaching into the physical household. The locus is 'house' (bayit), the home, plus its 'gates' (shearim). The home and its threshold are the only spatial anchors named. Whether complementary instruction occurs elsewhere is not addressed by the words.

Eph.6.4 · for · genre: epistle

Key terms. G1625 ἐκτρέφω, G3809 παιδεία, G3559 νοουθεσία, G3962 πατήρ

Force. 'The fathers' (hoi pateres) are told 'nurture them' (ektrephe te auta) 'in training and admonition of the Lord' (en paideia kai nouthesia kyriou). The verb 'nurture' (ektrepho) occurs only here and in Ephesians 5:29 of nourishing one's own flesh, so it is a body-care metaphor for parental sustenance, not a school-procurement verb. 'Training' (paideia) and 'admonition' (nouthesia) name the content and disposition, training and admonition of the Lord, in a possessive genitive (a noun in the 'belonging-to-X' grammatical form) that fixes the aim. The clause specifies WHAT the children must be reared in, not WHERE or BY WHOM it must be delivered.

Complicating texts

Acts.7.22 · addressed

Stephen says Moses 'was instructed' (epaideuthe) 'in all the wisdom of the Egyptians' (en pase sophia Aigyption), using the exact cognate 'instruct' (paideuo) of the noun 'training' (paideia) in Ephesians 6:4. The same lexical root names instruction received inside a wholly non-covenant institution and the narrative voice attaches no rebuke. This shows that the canon's training vocabulary itself is not channel-restricted at the word level. It does not by itself prescribe permissibility of every modern channel, but it is a real lexical counterweight to any reading that would forbid non-covenant settings purely from the words 'training' (paideia) or 'instruct' (paideuo).

Dan.1.4 · addressed

Daniel and his companions were taught the literature and language of the Chaldeans inside a pagan court for three years and remained faithful while refusing defilement at the diet level. The narrative shows a faithful outcome from instruction outside the covenant home, supporting permissibility of mixed settings, but as narrative it describes and does not prescribe. The parental-primacy duty is neither delegated nor abolished by the account.

Prov.22.6 · addressed

'Train up a child' uses 'train' or 'dedicate' (chanak), a verb that elsewhere names dedicating a house or temple (1 Kings 8:63, 2 Chronicles 7:5, Deuteronomy 20:5), so its core sense is initiate or dedicate. With 'the young one' (na-ar) as object and 'according to his way' (al-pi darko) as direction, it commands a parental dedicating into a way of life. It bears on formation but its vocabulary names neither home, synagogue, nor academy, so it cannot rank the three modern modes. It is lexically silent on the disputed point and is therefore left open.

Variants

Verdict variant-sensitive: False · ECM status: n/a

The bundle reports no variant units and marks the cited verses outside ECM (the critical edition of New Testament textual variants) scope. Deuteronomy is Hebrew Old Testament and Ephesians 6:4 is textually stable for 'training' (paideia), 'admonition' (nouthesia), and 'nurture' (ektrepho), so no variant bears on the verdict.

analogia scripturae invoked · progressive revelation factor argument_from_silence_permissive: true · The training vocabulary in the anchor texts names content and disposition rather than channel, the cognate 'instruct' (paideuo) describes Moses receiving Egyptian instruction without rebuke, and Daniel learning Chaldean letters yielded a faithful outcome. On this reading the lexicon binds parents to the goal and leaves the channel to wisdom, so all three modern modes are permissible when parental primacy is preserved.

covenantal_formation_restrictive: disputed · The household saturation of Deuteronomy 6:6 to 9, where the words rest on the parent's heart, are sharpened into the sons, and are written on the doorposts of 'house' (bayit) and 'gates' (shearim), frames discipleship as parent-and-home centered. On this reading channels that structurally displace the parent from the bulk of formation stand in tension with the texts, so blanket equal permissibility is not lexically guaranteed even though no single mode is named or banned.

wisdom_application_neutral: disputed · Because the canon's vocabulary supplies an undisputed duty and an underdetermined (not settled by the words) channel, the proposition functions as a wisdom question rather than a lexical question. Both the permissive and the restrictive lens are reading from outside the word list, so neither can claim the words decide it.

The first clause, parental primacy, is supported across law and epistle by command, repetition, writing, and nurture verbs. The second clause, equal permissibility of three modern schooling modes, is an inference because the modes are anachronistic to the canon and the training vocabulary names content not channel.

Stem audit

verdict-preloaded: yes

Neutralized form. Scripture commands parents to disciple their children. Whether public schooling, Christian schooling, and homeschooling are each acceptable means of fulfilling that duty is the question under examination, with parental responsibility for discipleship remaining primary.

The original stem asserts that all three modes are permissible Christian approaches, which front-loads a verdict on the disputed permissibility clause. The verdict is derived on the original compound stem, but the neutralized form separates the strongly supported primacy duty from the contested channel question. (VERDICT-CHANGED: not applicable here; verdict remains 'disputed'.)
